Board and UC students discuss new campus

by Craig Coenen

Board members and Urban Campus (UC) students confronted each other again on the issue of a new Urban Campus at a meeting Dec. 13.

Mike Hansman, UC student, read a statement to the Board asking why the UC wasn't the number one priority for state funds recently collected from the three-quarter mill tax levy to be appropriated to Area XI Community College.

The tax levy will be available July of 1977 and none of the funds have been committed yet, Board members said.

Max Kreager, Board member, said when the funds were available the UC would receive due consideration. "The Iowa legislature hasn't approved any money yet because they haven't seen the need to improve the UC," he said.

Ethelene McCarrell, another UC student, asked the Board how past funds from the 1974 three-quarter mill tax levy were spent.

Walt Hetzel, Board president, said the money from that tax levy went to pay off old debts the college accumulated prior to the acquisition of the Urban Campus.

Hetzel added that "plans are in the making for new or improved facilities for the UC"

"You must be patient with us. All the money can't go to the Urban Campus," Hetzel said.

McCarrell said that UC students wanted to make sure the Board was aware of their needs.

"We knew we had to stand up and take action before all the money was spent," she said.

College students have high incidence of suicide

by Kay Davis and Brian Pierce

Ten thousand students in the United States attempted suicide each year, and over one thousand succeed, according to Dr. Helen Burr, clinical psychologist at Broadlawns Hospital. The incidence of suicide rate is twice as high among college students as it is among young people in the same age range who are not in college.

Burr said depression is a leading cause of suicide. "Most depression is due to a loss of some kind—a loss of money, a job, loss of a loved one or any number of things," she said.

The late teen-age years were the ones most likely to bring on depression, Burr said.

"Moving out on your own, having to face responsibility, wanting independence yet still afraid of having to do things on their own can be very frightening for young people" she said.

Some people can take more pressure than others. It depends on the background and personality of the individual, Dr. Burr said.

"Almost everyone suffers some amount of depression at some time in their lives. It is when a person seems sad all the time, doesn't respond, and has no enthusiasm for life, that a friend or loved one should begin to worry about them.

Especially if they say there is nothing left to live for, or that people would be better off without them anyway," Dr. Burr said.

Anyone suffering depression can go to a psychologist or psychiatrist. One may also go to the Polk County Mental Health office in Des Moines, or Broadlawns Mental Health Clinic, said Dr. Burr.

Iranian Students Association on campus

by Craig Coenen

Members of the Iranian Students Association (ISA) were on the Ankeny campus recently, passing out literature about their organization and seeking signatures for petitions.

The ISA has been in the news the last few months because two members of the group have been charged with the assassination attempt on the Iranian ambassador in Paris, France. ISA members claim the charges are false and that the students were "framed".

Members of the student association said that the charges are part of a conspiracy between French officials and a group called Savak, which the ISA calls "Iran's gestapo-like secret police." The ISA said Savak wants the student organization liquidated.

ISA also believes Savak collaborates with officials in France and

The U.S. in harassing members of their organization.

The Campus Chronicle news staff contacted the Counsel General of Iran, M. Mehran, in Chicago, to get a statement from an Iranian government official.

Mehran said, "We have eyewitnesses that the two ISA members deliberately tried to assassinate the Iranian ambassador in France."

"The allegations by the ISA saying the French government and Savak are in collaboration are false. "The Iranian government is against such terrorist activity and will not listen to such petitions," he said.

Sculpture for campus possible in near future

by Elaine Jordan

The Ankeny campus may soon be displaying its first piece of sculpture—a ten foot tall, steel, abstract art object.

The idea for the piece came from Commercial Art student, Fred McBride. Designing and building the sculpture is an individual goal McBride has set for himself. He said he purposely planned for the structure to be abstract and untitled. "I want the art object neutral, so everybody will see something different in it," he said.

McBride said he wants to donate the piece to the college because "There are no other art objects on this campus. Maybe my donation will instill some art appreciation in future students who attend the college."

The structure will be made from a ten foot sheet of quarter-inch steel. McBride plans to have a few welding students help him in the construction of the project. "With their help, we should have it done in one day," he said.

McBride had hoped that the sculpture would be completed and erected by Christmas. "But the welding instructor said the cold weather would hinder construction which has to be done outside," he said. When the object is finished, it will stand between buildings 24 and 25.

COMMERCIAL Art student, Fred McBride, holds a scale model of the abstract sculpture he plans to donate to the college. The sculpture will stand ten feet tall when completed and will be located outside the Food Services building.

BETH PETERSON, Liberal Arts student, helps decorate the Christmas tree in Bldg. 25. Decorating the tree was in preparation for the Holiday Homecoming party held today for students and staff and alumni.

People look for balloons with certificates inside

by Elaine Jordan

Instead of pennies from heaven, people have looked for balloons with "Des Moines Area Community College" printed on the outside of them.

As a part of the tenth anniversary celebration held by DMACC last October, 75 balloons were released with certificates inside entitling whoever found them to free prizes. The total amount of merchandise to be given away added to $150, according to Dale Wagner of Student Activities.

So far five "balloon prizes" have been redeemed. These included a dictionary, a stuffed toy, a frisbee, a beer stein and a book bag.

Two of the balloons were found in the Ankeny area. One was found at Beaman, Iowa, which is about 46 miles north and east of the college. Another was found at Luzerne, Iowa about 80 miles east of the institution.

Snow removal no small task

by Bill Saunders

Removing snow from the Ankeny campus grounds is no small task, according to Don Zuck, Physical Plant director.

It involves clearing one and a half miles of main driveways, three miles of sidewalks and twenty acres of parking lots. Even with this great an area, Zuck said it took a minimum of two hours to get the snow cleared. The job involves 11 people using 8 pieces of equipment which includes three pickups with blades, one tractor with blade, two tractors with brooms, one dump truck and one salt - and - sand spreader.

Quentin Preston, supervisor of custodians and grounds, recalled that one of the worst snows he helped clear occurred three years ago when snowdrifts were as high as some of the buildings.

Holiday Homecoming today

Students, alumni, faculty and staff are invited to attend the DMACC "Holiday Homecoming."

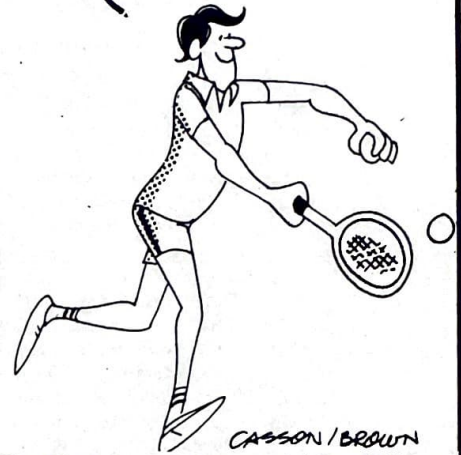

The Christmas party is being held today at 11 a.m. - 1 p.m. and 7 - 9 p.m. in Bldg. 24. Punch and cookies are to be served.

Several college organizations joined in this effort of bringing those associated with DMACC together for a Christmas celebration, according to Don Kerr, dean of Student Activities.

Some of those taking part in preparation of the event were students in Building Trades who built a fireplace for the party decor, the Alumni Association, Student Activities, the Faculty Senate and college Relations who purchased the Christmas tree.

Med-Tech program students score well on tests

by Elaine Jordan

DMACC students in the Medical Technology programs scored well in national testing, according to Margaret Rowe, program chairperson.

National tests are given semi-annually to students in the lab assistant and lab technician programs.

The 22 students who took part in the Certified Lab Assistant test ranked 7th nationally in average test scores. The area college's average test score of 155 was higher than the national average of 138. Out of a possible 200 questions, the highest score at the college was 180 achieved by Lori Naylor of Perry.

Twelve students took part in another professional program test: Medical Lab Technician test. DMACC students ranked 5th nationally in this category. In this area, the average score of 129 was higher than the national average of 117. Highest score at the college was 153 achieved by Karen Harms of Ankeny.

"We are pleased with how well our students performed on these tests and feel the programs are serving the community very well," Rowe said.

New policy on fund raising

by Kay Davis

Future fund raising projects by campus clubs involving food will be limited to bake sales, according to a memo issued by Carroll Bennett, dean of Career Education.

The reason for the policy change is because in the past students made too much of a mess, according to Jim Blair, head custodian, resulting in permanent damage such as grease-stained carpets.

There will be no more sales of chili soup, chili dogs, sloppy joes, pizza sandwiches, tacos or hot dogs.

Library hopes to issue cards soon

by Rosemary Hoover

DMACC hopes to start issuing library cards very soon said Diane Messersmith, librarian.

"Traditionally, library personnel ask for a validated student identification card, but part-time students and evening students are not issued an identification card, and they are eligible to check out library materials," Messersmith said.

There is a similar problem with using activity cards. "Many students don't use their activity card for anything so they don't carry their card with them. At least 75 per cent of the time when a student wants to check something out of the library, he doesn't have his activity card with him," she said.

Library personnel want a consistent identification card that every student could have, she said.

"We would like to start issuing library cards this Winter Quarter, but we haven't worked out all the procedures," she said. Messersmith said procedures include how to fill out the cards and verify the students' status, what to do about losses, and when to find time among library personnel to issue the cards.

She said a student enrolled in a course in the college, even if the student is taking just one class, can get a library card.

There will be no charge for the library cards.

The cards will probably not reduce library fines. The cards should help locate students who have overdue books and have dropped classes she said.

Dear Fellow Veterans and Dependents:

There is a club on the DMACC Campus which benefits YOU. The all new VETS CLUB, whose goal is to serve you by wanting to hear anything that you want to complain about, whether it concerns your Student Senate and College Activities or, Veterans Administration and Federal Government actions that effect you.

The Club at times is involved in various fund raising drives to provide money for projects that the Club has undertaken on or off campus as well as supply money for our own financial needs. Vets Club is also a good opportunity to meet other people who share some of the same ideas about our college, state and government, as well as a good time.

Meetings are held on the first and third Thursday of the month at present on Campus in Bldg. 25 in Room 2509, between the hours of 11:00 - 12:00 a.m.

IF YOU ARE TIRED OF THINGS BEING SNAFUED JOIN VETS CLUB AND WE WILL HELP YOU STRAIGHTEN IT OUT.

Should reconsider funding priorities

The DMACC administration may need to reconsider their funding priorities. They recently allocated $89,000 for a campus graphics project. This project involves renumbering buildings, erecting more campus signs and building kiosks.

Campus Views

Coordinator of the graphics project, Don Zuck, said more outdoor signs would aid visitors in finding their way around the campus. A less expensive solution to that problem would be to have Building Trades students build more signs and have Commercial Art students paint them.

There is no doubt that the buildings could be more sensibly numbered than they are now. But is the resulting cost and confusion worth it? Renumbering the buildings mean changing room numbers. Presently all room numbers are on computer file in coordination with class schedules. Renumbering the rooms would mean hours of reprogramming facility and scheduling files for the computer. This means spending even more money as a result of changing the building numbers.

Granted these projects may improve the campus. However, there are more pressing financial needs involving staff and students that should have been taken care of first.

According to Ruth Aurelius, chairperson of the DMACC grievance committee, the college needs at least $270,000 to place 50 faculty members in their proper place on the salary scale.

This money is needed to increase salaries for instructors who have been underpaid for years. Aurelius said actually more money was needed, but the administration told her this was all the budget would allow.

For over a year Urban Campus students have requested improved facilities, but they are told they must wait until more money is available.

The DMACC faculty association sent a letter to Superintendent Lowery and the Board protesting how college money was being spent.

It's too late for protests. Bids for the graphics project have been accepted. The administration can't be entirely blamed for how they spent college funds. They did things according to the rules. Allocations for these projects were discussed at public meetings, and the Board took the lowest bids for the projects.

But that isn't the point. The point is that when it comes to a choice between spending money for people and their needs or spending for buildings and landscaping, people should come first.

MERRY CHRISTMAS and HAPPY NEW YEAR !!

Christmas message from Lowery

The following is a Christmas greeting to students from Superintendent Paul Lowery.

"As we pause from our daily routine to give thanks and count our blessings, there are a number of compliments that you have earned. Your leaders have shown increasing concern and maturity of action; your newspaper is becoming your voice; and you have participated in the governance structure of the college through the various committees and the college council to a greater extent. Please accept my thanks and gratitude for this involvement.

"My travel overseas continues to reinforce my belief that the quality of life in the United States and the freedoms that we enjoy still far surpass all others. Let me challenge you to fully prepare yourself so that you can command, demand of, and wrest from life the maximum in terms of self - fulfillment and enjoyment.

"May all the feelings of warmth, thankfulness, and good will be yours during this Holiday Season and throughout the New Year."

Culinary students continue dinners

DMACC Culinary Arts students will continue serving monthly gourmet dinners from January through May. The meals feature foods of a foreign country. The dinners, which consist of nine courses, are served between 7 and 10 p.m. Culinary students prepare the menus and cook and serve all the meals. The next dinner scheduled for January 12 focuses on Greek cuisine. The cost is $10 per person. Dinners are served in the executive dining room in Bldg. 25. Reservations can be made at ext. 330 or 532.

DMACC students prepare madrigal dinners

by Elaine Jordan
Six DMACC Culinary Arts students applied the results of their schooling by preparing and serving the madrigal dinners held at the Des Moines Plymouth Congregational Church Dec. 5-7. The madrigal dinners featured music and food of the Elizabethan era of the 1500's. In keeping with this theme, the Culinary Arts students researched old English cookbooks to plan their menu. The meal included Rock Cornish hens, bread pudding and trifle torts. Names for the dishes came from Canterbury Tales. The students served 420 people over the three day period. Among those attending the dinners were Gov. Robert Ray and Mayor Richard Olson. The dinners gave the students experience in buffet catering said Chef Robert Anderson. Food Services students are also catering the DMACC Christmas parties.

Student Senate meets

by Karen Roach
At the Student Senate meeting held Dec. 9, the resignation of the Vice President of Auxiliary Services was approved. Bill Brownell, who ran for the office last fall, was elected by a majority of the Senate, to replace Beth Petterson.

During open discussion of the meeting, a question was raised about the number of classes meeting during the Thursday activity hour. Dale Wagner, director of Student Activities, is working on this problem and will report back to the Senate at the January meeting.

Also at the meeting, approval and appropriations were made for various clubs. The by-laws for Articles I, II, III, and IV of the constitution were approved and amended.

A total of 15 Senate members were present, and three guests.

Age of college students increases over past five years

by Al Kataoka

In the past five years, there has been an increase in the number of older people, ages 26 - 35, who are returning to college. Leonard Bengtson DMACC vice - president of Student life, said that students in the 26 - 35 group make up about 18 per cent of this quarter's student population. He said that this figure was about 10 per cent of this in 1971. Bengtson said that he expects this figure to increase, and that it should not cause any overcrowding problems at the institution in the next few years. Bengtson said that he thought that increasing technology was the reason why older people are coming to DMACC. "I think many people are coming back because they need to learn skills that will keep them current with their job or profession," he said.

Richard Yach, DMACC Economics instructor, said that the state of the economy or the recession were not significant factors for reason people are returning to college. He said that the increase in technology was the biggest factor, but there is also the fact that white collar jobs have traditionally had lower unemployment rates than blue collar jobs. "During the recession, the white collar professions had an average of 4 per cent unemployment, while blue collar professions had an average of 12 per cent unemployment." Yach said.

Yach also said that the biggest increases in jobs are now in the service sector, particularly in the computer and medical fields. "Since 1975, there has been a total of $118 billion spent on medical services alone, and that represents eight per cent of the gross national product," Yach said.

Harold Gamm, associate dean of Career Education, said that he believed our affluent society was the reason why older students are returning to college. "Our society is beyond the stage where the satisfaction of basic physical needs are the primary reason why people work. The older students who come here are sure of where they are going, and they tend to be more goal - oriented."

Gamm also said that people these days can afford to change jobs more frequently, and the current standard of living allows them to do that. He said that he gave up a good job a few years ago because he was dissatisfied, unhappy, and tired of traveling. He said that he thinks many people are becoming aware of the fact that leaving a job and adjusting to a new one is not as difficult as they once thought.

Most students

interviewed agreed with Gamm's opinion, stating that personal achievement was the main factor that made them decide to return to college. Of 25 students, 17 cited personal achievement, six said dissatisfaction with their present job, and two said improvement of their present job. The students surveyed were all day - time students, enrolled in General Education programs.

Faulty blackboard hinders students' note taking

by Kay Davis

Taking notes in any class can sometimes be a hassle.

But last week at least five classes in Bldg. 31 discovered that note taking had entered an entirely new era.

"You really had to write fast," one student said.

"It kind of kept me awake," said another.

The problem was not a fast talking instructor, or an extremely interesting discussion. It was a faulty blackboard.

When instructors wrote important things on the blackboard, in less than a minute the entire message disappeared. It was as if the chalk had completely dropped off the board.

"Words just seemed to float off into the air," said Curt Wiberg, philosophy instructor.

The problem was an oil-based cleaning agent used by mistake to clean the blackboards.

"I wrote the word 'Renaissance' on the board and turned to speak to the class. When I turned back a minute later to make a point and underline the word, it was gone," said Richard Wagner, history instructor.

Jim Blair, head custodian, said Bldg. 31 is one of five buildings that are cleaned by Professional Building Service Cleaners.

"The boards were cleaned with an oily rag or something. We remedied the situation with soap and water when we were called," said Blair.

DMACC offers women self-defense program

DMACC is presenting a program called "Lady Stay Alive" instructing women in self-defense.

Carolyn Hukle, volunteer with the Des Moines Police Department, is conducting the program. She said, "The program stresses common sense. It tells women situations to avoid to stay out of trouble. But it also teaches women techniques in self-defense if they find themselves in a dangerous situation."

The program, sponsored by the Office of Education Association, is scheduled for Jan. 13 at 11 a.m. in the Bldg. 24 auditorium.

Commercial art students show Christmas is giving

by Elaine Jordan

If the spirit of Christmas is in giving, then DMACC Commercial Art students have done just that. They put about 26 hours of their time into various Christmas projects around the Ankeny campus.

One of their projects was a short notice assignment for the DMACC chorus's Christmas musical. Bill Johnson, chorus director, needed some illustrations for one of the program's songs, " 'Twas the Night Before Christmas."

The art students worked a fast eleven hours, designing and illustrating 24 slides for the musical.

"The short notice assignment was good experience for the students," said Jack Mastrofski, art instructor. "They looked at it as a challenge to get the job done in time."

The art students didn't have to hurry quite so much in preparing their annual project of painting a Christmas mural on the Bookstore windows in Bldg. 25. About 15 hours went into this particular job. It involved designing the mural, sketching a small scale drawing, enlarging it proportionately to fit the window space, and then the final step of painting the scene. Bookstore manager, Joe Morr, provided the paint.

"We hope the mural helps get the students in the spirit of Christmas," said Barb Stetzel, Commercial Art student who coordinated the project.

She needn't worry. The bright, colorful mural, which depicts the chipmunks helping Santa load his sleigh, should bring a small grin to even the hardest Scrooge on campus.

The Commercial Art students deserve some recognition for donating their time and talents in making the campus a little merrier.

KATHY SHAW, Commercial Art student, applies her talents along with the rest of the class in painting a mural on the Bookstore windows.
